MICHIGAN, April 18, 2019 (Newswire.com) - With wedding season now in full swing, it's hard to miss the images plastered all over social media showing off the wedding ring stacks and engagement rings of the newly-wed and newly-engaged.

For those who are still shopping for “the” perfect ring, fear not! Take some inspiration from the biggest bridal jewelry trends women love this year, according to the experts at Medawar Jewelers in Michigan.

Pantone’s handpicked hues for 2019 all veer towards the warmer end of the spectrum, and when it comes to bridal jewelry metals, many brides agree. This year, yellow gold and rose gold rings are set to overtake white gold settings in popularity. Additionally, the use of colored gemstones as accents or even center stones has skyrocketed in popularity, as has a tendency towards using thin, delicate bands for wedding and engagement rings.

Engagement Ring Trends

When it comes to engagement rings, many brides-to-be are taking traditional designs and turning them on their head for creative-yet-classic styles. Take, for example, the popular halo setting with a round center diamond that dominated the industry last year. This year, women are requesting fancy shaped diamonds nestled in geometric or vintage-inspired halos. Also popular are three stone rings with contemporary accents and center stones set in unconventional orientations.

Wedding Ring Trends

Meanwhile, popular wedding bands styles this year take on a “more is more” approach to their designs. Stackable rings are a trend that goes hand-in-hand with thin, delicate ring bands; the minimalist style allows for a bridal jewelry stack of rings that look lavish without going overboard. Glamorous eternity bands, adorned with diamonds or other gemstones the entire length of the ring, and rings with embellishments like milgrain and filigree are two other bride-approved styles retailers are seeing a lot of this year.
